Just because a living room is a space where you spend a lot of time doesn't mean a living room needs to be a place chockablock full of a lot of things. By paring down furniture, art, doodads and knick-knacks, living rooms can become a minimalist retreat ideal for lounging, socializing, or snoozing. The living room is the place where friends and family gather to spend quality time in a home, so it's important for it to be well-designed. From sleek lofts to design schemes layered with antiques, these eye-catching living spaces are bursting with character. What is expat life in San Francisco like? San Francisco is an incredible city and a popular place for expats to move to. But as much as I love visiting San Francisco, with its extremely high cost of living I don't think it's a city I would ever move to. For those who have small living rooms, picking out paint colors can be a little tricky. On the one hand, painting the whole room white can open up the walls and make the small room feel a little more airy. On the other hand, limiting yourself to just one stark color can put a cramp on some people ...
