OCD is manifested in a variety of forms, but is most commonly characterized by a subject's obsessive (repetitive, distressing, intrusive) thoughts and related compulsions (tasks or rituals) which attempt to neutralize the obsessions. OCD is a third person in a marriage. In addition to the positives of companionship and romance, getting married certainly has its negatives. There will be communication problems, petty arguments, disagreement over household responsibilities, issues surrounding sex, dirty socks on the floor, in-laws, and of course who gets to hold...
