When you're hoping for a positive pregnancy test and you finally see one, you probably want to know how accurate that result is before you celebrate. When all directions are followed properly, today's pregnancy tests are up to 99% accurate when used after your missed period. The best answer to how to make a pregnancy test say positive, is to have a pregnant person pee on the test stick. You can either borrow a used test stick from a friend (lots of people keep them as baby keepsakes) or buy a couple cheap tests. A simple way to have a false positive pregnancy test in this way is peeing in the cup and adding a few detergents into your urine. After dipping the test stick in the urine, wait some minutes to get the positive result. Health & Pregnancy Guide. When the pregnancy test comes back positive, you've begun a life-altering journey.
